

10/2/18

Tuesday's Transition Tips

Understanding Academic Accommodations

Colleges are not responsible for making sure students with disabilities are successful academically, just that they have access to the same educational opportunities as every other student. College students with disabilities often use academic accommodations so they can do the same course work as their peers. In today's Tuesday Tip we focus on the importance of parents and youth understanding the accommodations process and what accommodations work best for each individual student.

The links below are series of videos brought to you by the Pacer's National Parent Center on Transition and Employment. The videos are very imperative to all of those involved in a student's transition plan and supporting them in their postsecondary educational setting.

Assistive Technology in Action - Meet Sam

Transition Tech Talk: No barriers - Technology for College-level Reading

Check out these publications that provide more insight and tips to assist with college level reading:

College-level Reading: Tips and Tools to Help with Comprehension and Fluency

Getting Started: Reading with Audiobooks and Text-to-Speech

Transitioning to College with a Disability

Disability Resources: A Student's Perspective

Kandace M. Evans, M. Ed, MATM
Teacher Consultant/Transition Coordinator
Washtenaw Intermediate School District