

Tuesday's Transition Tip

Guide to Transition Services and Activities

Transition planning is an individualized, cyclical process. With each twist and turn of the cycle, we're helping a student through self-exploration—discovering the things they like as well as the things they don't like—so that they can look at their postsecondary goals with more awareness. Sometimes that means sticking with the path they're on, sometimes it means exploring a side path, and sometimes it means choosing a completely new path. Transition services and activities are key to helping students engage in that self-exploration.

Today's tip we highlight a new guide we ran across from Indiana Secondary Transition Resource Center: "Transition Services and Activities: Making the Connection." This new 17-page guide contains detailed examples for six different students, each with charts depicting the student's postsecondary goals and transition services and activities as well as appropriate assessments that inform her/his goals. The guide also includes links to assessments and a page of additional transition resources.

Kandace M. Evans, M. Ed, MATM
Teacher Consultant/Transition Coordinator
Washtenaw Intermediate School District